CINCINNATI -- The Banks will have at least one spot hopping by the Cincinnati Reds home opener.

Developers said Tuesday they are moving fast to have four other locations going by the end of summer.

The owners of the Holy Grail bar and restaurant said they expect to be ready for the March 31 opening date, if not two weeks earlier.

"You're going to see a whole new entertainment district come up. We're right here, close to the river. I think, for years, people have been waiting for this to happen," said Tom Heitker, of the Holy Grail.

Heitker would like to have the Holy Grail open by St. Patrick's Day. It will be right across from the Reds Baseball Hall of Fame.

Managers at the Toby Keith venture, I Love This Bar and Grille, are shooting for an opening date of no later than August. The venue will be on Second Street, about half a block from the baseball stadium.

Huey's Diner, a New Orleans-style spot on the south corner of Freedom Way, is aiming for an August opening date, as well.

The same goes for Le Crepe Nanou and the Wine Loft, which will be next door.

Managers at the InBetween Tavern said they've been one of the only bars near the stadium for about 15 years. Now they'll have to adapt with the times.

"Going to expand my dining hours through the evening," said Bob Layton, of the InBetween Tavern.

Layton said he was previously dependent on the Reds' success, now he's welcoming the Banks lineup.

"The competition brings more people down, makes it a destination point, and therefore, my business will be better off," Layton said.

Developers said they are hoping to lock up additional "eater-tainment" tenants that blend food and music before summer.
